A: This is a very odd error and I have seen it only two times in my two years of doing Windows Kernel development and neither of them was caused by a reset. I suggest doing a device scan if you are at the firmware build stage, and see if there are any odd errors. It's very unlikely that the build would be successful if there are problems. If that doesn't help, we need more info, like what stage you are at with the build, if you have code, etc.

Q: Can I open a modal from a component? I have a component in Angular that has a loader icon that is clicked for 5 seconds before navigating. The component is rendered in a route's template. I want to show a modal when the component loads so the user can browse the "loading" page for a set period of time. I'm thinking of how to go about opening the modal from the component. Here is my component's code:

import { Component } from '@angular/core'; import { ComponentFixture, TestBed } from '@angular/core/testing'; import { Router } from '@angular/router'; import { FormGroup, Validators } from '@angular/forms'; import { HttpClient } from '@angular/common/http'; import { IntroductionModalComponent } from './introduction-modal.component'; import { ModalService } from './modal.service'; @Component({ templateUrl: './introduction-modal.component.html', styleUrls: ['./introduction-modal.component.scss'], }) export class IntroductionModalComponent { modal =

null; rootComp = null; constructor( public modalService: ModalService, public router: Router, public componentFactory:
ComponentFactory, public httpClient: HttpClient, ) { } show(rootComp: any, placement: any) { this.rootComp = rootComp; if (placement!== 'top-right' && placement!== 'top-left' && placement!== 'top-center' && placement!== 'top-bottom')
