How to get Crack: First of all download the crack from the link and install the crack software. Run this software and use its activation key Q: How to generate csh style prompt using bash? One of our developers has been showing up on my machine at odd hours to fiddle with some internet related scripts, and now I get a lw (short version of 12H) prompt. I checked my bash profile, and didn't see anything that would explain this. Any ideas on how to adjust my bash session to no longer show this special character? I'm running bash, and plan to get bash 4.3, which doesn't appear to have an --interpret-prompt option, unfortunately. A: You can edit the PS1 variable in /etc/bashrc and put a # in front of the line that reads PS1=$' if you don't want to be prompted. More info on the PS1 variable can be found here. A: To answer the question in general, use the variable PS1. The default value of PS1 is "u:~$ " In most cases, when you get a 'w' prompt, it is probably just the PS1 variable being reset. If you look at the man page for the prompt variable, you will see that you can do exactly what you want by setting PS1 explicitly, for instance: PS1=$ '3ef4e8ef8d
