If I were on a budget, I would not use AWS. ~~~ michaelbuddy I didn't get that. If you don't use AWS, why are you buying AWS from Amazon? What's the value add? ------ seiji Someone buy him a Macbook Pro with a retina display and a big screen ~~~ adamtj I didn't get what you were saying here. If you're trying to say you're skeptical of Apple's support for open source, I don't think that's going to change anytime soon. I agree with you in general that if someone wants to use a Macbook Pro they should get one without Apple's "secret sauce." But I can also say with certainty that I trust Apple's hardware and software engineering expertise more than I trust those of Microsoft, Intel, and whatever other competitors are out there (if there are any in the consumer space). ~~~ shurcooL I think what Adam was saying is that even if he's not using OS X or MacBookPro, he'll still get MacbookPro and buy it from Apple rather than a third party. The point is, if it's super cheap to get a macbookpro, why not buy a macbookpro from Apple instead of spending money on installing Linux into a macbook? ------ sh

I've got a service which returns a list of people, a component which displays a list of people and a component which displays the details of a specific person. When I run the application, and the component that displays a list of people makes a request to the service, I get a list of people back as expected. But when I click a specific person, my detail component is not able to access the information I got from the service. My guess is that because my component is listening to the same event from my service, that the information isn't passed as I thought it would be. How can I go about making my data available to my component? People Component import { Component, OnInit, Input } from '@angular/core'; import { NavParams } from '@angular/common'; import { PeopleService } from '../../services/people.service'; @Component({ selector: 'app-people', templateUrl: './people.component.html', styleUrls: ['./people.component.css'] }) export class PeopleComponent implements OnInit { constructor(private peopleService: PeopleService) {} public people = this.peopleService.people; ngOnInit(): void { } public onPeopleClick(person: Person) { this.peopleService.getDetails(person); } } Service import { Injectable } from '@angular/core'; import { Http, Headers, RequestOptions } from '@angular/http'; import { Observable } 2d92ce491b
