For example, this is what my controller does: // Get the Home record of current record var homeModel = Model.GetHomeRecords().Single(); // Generate the rendered HTML var html = "Some HTML content"; // Now I need to render the html on the client (by calling a client side method) The result of my html is this: Some HTML content The problem is that if I call my client-side code from the Controller, I get an error like this: Javascript Error: Can't set headers after they are sent. This error is due to the fact that the client-side code tries to send a new HTTP header, because the client-side code needs to have access to the model data (the homeModel). So, is there a way to generate a string of HTML in a controller, and, after that, call a client 2d92ce491b
