Fluorescence immunoassay using a multiphoton-excited fluorescent substance in combination with iRFP for Ca<sup>2+</sup> imaging in living cells. Multiphoton excitation imaging has been used to analyze the distribution of Ca(2+) in living cells because it enables a direct measurement of Ca(2+) dynamics without using fluorescent indicators or other markers. However, the majority of existing tools are based on conventional two-photon excitation, which has limitations in terms of excitation volume, depth of penetration, etc. To overcome these limitations, we developed a new combination of a fluorescent indicator, iRFP, and two-photon excitation that allows us to visualize the distribution of Ca(2+) ions. The new method permits the simultaneous measurement of the fluorescence intensity of Ca(2+) ions and the emission spectrum of each indicator in cells, which is useful to identify suitable images for use in super-resolution microscopy and other microscopic techniques. Kesha didn't drop her music after Drake dissed her — she's suing for defamation, injury, humiliation, and demand for $75 million. She's also filed a claim with the National Labor Relations Board, accusing the Toronto rapper of unlawfully interfering in her union organizing effort. Kesha had accused Drake of sexually assaulting her, and the two fought off and on through 2015 and 2016. Despite the tumult, she released a few singles, including "Praying" and "Woman." "Drake, you may be the person who'solved' my laryngitis, or made my voice sound thin — but you did so by publicly humiliating me on radio and social media," Kesha wrote. "You called me a liar. You denied any involvement in or knowledge of my situation. You said I was stupid. You said I was a terrible mother. You said I was making it all up to try to get attention. You said my voice was popping out of my throat because I was imitating an injured seal or a child struggling for breath after trying to tell me my mother was trying to kill me." Advertisement "You publicly called me a 'demon' and a 'lizard' and a 'baby.'" Kesha is represented by attorney Mark Geragos. 3ef4e8ef8d
