Videoconferencing is a great way to communicate across wide distances. It can even be held over the Internet. Now you can connect your desktop and PC equipped with a microphone and a webcam to other computers with Internet connection through a free software called "Videoconferencing." In the present context, we want to talk about "Webcam Translator" version 3.0 which is a useful tool to convert video captured by a webcam into a format that can be send over Internet. This tool can be used as replacement for webcams or to open your webcam to the public. We are talking about the "Webcam Translator" which is a small yet powerful program that will "talk" your webcam to other computers. While this "Webcam Translator" talker can be downloaded through the U.S. market for free, a paid version is available through which the program will be able to save your conversations in the local computer. This program also has a web server interface that allows you to see, at any time, what is going on in your webcam. In addition to "Webcam Translator" version 3.0, there is a version that is called "Audio Translator" which allows you to talk over Skype. The "Webcam Translator" can also be used to take video samples in a digital format to your computers or to send your camera to Skype. After downloading this tool, you will be able to start taking video samples, either to send it over Internet or to keep it on your computer. You need a web camera and a computer to be able to use the "Webcam Translator" program in a automatic way. To start, you need to download the program which you will find as a Windows executable. You will need a working Internet connection. Next, choose the format in which
