AutoCAD is the most widely used desktop CAD software in the world. More than 5 million professional and amateur users around the world use AutoCAD on a daily basis. The version history of AutoCAD is shown in the table below.

AutoCAD Versions Released
AutoCAD 1983

Early versions of AutoCAD supported by the Expert Systems Research Group (ESRG), a Xerox subsidiary, and Intel. Autodesk formed in 1983. The AutoCAD software license to original users was sold to companies like Prudential Insurance and was later sold to Autodesk, the name changed to "Autodesk, Inc." Autodesk develops the AutoCAD software. The application is marketed and sold by Autodesk, Inc. AutoCAD is free to professional users and is sold to commercial users at a price. Professional AutoCAD is priced at $5,195 for a single user (i.e., the annual maintenance fees are waived). Professional AutoCAD for small businesses costs $2,595 for a single user, and the application is available at no cost to small businesses using AutoCAD LT (a stripped-down version of AutoCAD), which is available at no cost for non-commercial users. Autodesk acquired ESRI in 2010. AutoCAD is based on ESRI's AutoCAD Map-It Map Designer application. AutoCAD is based on ESRI's AutoCAD Map-It Map Designer application. The AutoCAD Application Program Interface (API) enables developers to access all of the features of AutoCAD without having AutoCAD installed on the machine. In 2015, Autodesk acquired Trimble. MSPs can use the cloud-based services that Autodesk provides for their mobile users. MSPs can create AutoCAD desktop bundles for their customers. AutoCAD users who purchase the licenses can use their licenses on any Windows or Mac device. AutoCAD LT is a smaller AutoCAD application. AutoCAD LT is available free of charge for non-commercial use. The AutoCAD LT software license to original users was sold to companies like Prudential Insurance and was later sold to Autodesk, the name changed to "Autodesk, Inc."
