the initial report.: the 2 trials were not designed to be completely comparable. Neither trial was performed in a blinded fashion (interviewer or assessor blinding was not applied), which may have induced bias in the responses to be given by the participants. In our study, the mean surface roughness was 5.3 μm after the conventional treatment and 1.2 μm after the resin infiltration. The Knoop roughness measured after the conventional treatment and resin infiltration showed similar results.

These results are in accordance with the results of other studies. Abrasion studies by Nair et al. \[[@B9]\] reported the lowest roughness values after 30 minutes of brushing with a brush (2.5 μm) compared to the other brushing time periods (15 minutes and 60 minutes). Azar et al. \[[@B10]\] found that the Knoop roughness after three minutes of brushing with a
