A: First, I'd recommend that you use strict HTML validation with your HTML validator. Next, I'd check your HTML markup for issues: Use CDATA sections whenever you can. . This is a quick and easy way to escape any commas, brackets, etc. in unimportant code. Use empty elements like when you can, instead of punctuation. Marking it as empty just means that the parser treats it like a normal text node. Use in a document that is using CSS to style its elements, where you have to use punctuation to get a break of some kind. Above all, HTML is not a programming language. Use the right tool for the job. Q: How to define model for Logcat data or Volley data in android? I have used Volley in my application in android.I have logged the response from server.But when I am defining a model for the response in Volley I have not found how to define? If anyone had an idea please tell me. A: I have edited the Volley library and now we can see response like that. //Source code is SimpleResponse response = null; try { response = Volley.newResponse(request,new JsonObjectRequest(URL,callback).setShouldCache(false)); Log.i("Response",response.request().toString()); } catch (Exception e) { e.printStackTrace(); } //Edit is SimpleResponse response = null; try { JsonObjectRequest jsonObjectRequest = new JsonObjectRequest(URL,callback); jsonObjectRequest.setShouldCache(false); response = Volley.newResponse(request,jsonObjectRequest); Log.i("Response",response.request().toString()); } catch (Exception e) { e.printStackTrace(); } It looks like we may be getting some exciting news regarding Battlegrounds Expansion soon
