The KEYMACRO description is a tool for the validation of the functionality of the keymapping utility, as well as for the validation of the internal options of the macro editor. Up until now, the most intuitive keymap for the Mac users has been the one built by Larry Loeb, with the EasyScripts (Ease) keymap, which, as the name implies, could be considered as an upgrade of the original EasyMac for the Mac OS 8/9. The reason for the upgrades to ease was to unify the keymap with the rest of the Mac OS X function keys, in order to ease the user's ability to work with it in any setting, not just in the Mac OS 8/9. EasyScripts (Ease) is very easy to use, but it is not possible to assign more than one function to a single key, meaning that when you want to assign, for example, control+click or control+option+click, you need to reassign the space, option and control keys as well, and this can become tedious if you have many key assignments in one row. The KEYMACRO description is an improvement upon the EasyScripts (Ease) keymap, which, in addition to allowing you to reassign the control, option, option-click and alt keys, can also assign all the function keys a function. For example, here is how you can assign a control+A (^A) to the shift key and a control+B (^B) to the option key: KEYMACRO Description: The KEYMACRO description is a tool for the validation of the functionality of the keymapping utility, as well as for the validation of the internal options of the macro editor. What's New In Fenix Process Manager?

Fenix Process Manager, as mentioned, is a minimalistic Windows utility which enables you to browse through the processes running on your computer, allowing you to terminate them with ease. Fenix Process Manager Features: After launching the program, it will instantly display the processes that it can detect as running on your system. In order to do this, Fenix Process Manager analyzes the memory currently being used by your system in order to determine the processes that are using the most memory space and that may need to be terminated. If you click on a process name, Fenix Process Manager will tell you what information you can find on it, including the time it was detected as running and the priority level it is set at. In addition, you can see if the item is enabled, disabled or stopped. You can also kill it by right-clicking the process and selecting 'Kill Process'. Finally, when you select a process to kill, Fenix Process Manager will display a dialog informing you of the process's completion. Additionally, if the target process is critical, you will be able to find out if it was a 32-bit or 64-bit process.
