The tax cut reduces the amount that is withheld from a worker's paycheck to fund Social Security and Medicare, but it does nothing to deal with the massive structural deficits in the current Medicare program. It does, however, cut taxes on Americans, including many working class families. But the programs are a long way from funding what they were set up to pay for. As Social Security and Medicare grow older, they will need more money to make the promised payments. That money will not come from cuts in the taxes taken from workers' paychecks -- though that will also grow in coming years. The money will come from the taxes taken from the stock market and other investments made by wealthy taxpayers. When we talk about getting more money from the rich, we are really talking about cutting taxes on income, whether that income comes from wages, dividends, capital gains or inheritance. As the number of retirees has increased, the workers who retire to live off of that money have disproportionately come from the bottom of the income scale. Real income for those at the top has been rising, so their take-home pay has been rising, so their take-home pay has been declining in real terms. So, simply, they have less take-home income to pay for the promised benefits. The payroll tax is set to grow at a much lower rate than the income tax paid by top earners.Orszag for Romney – It's More of the Same One
