This classifier uses 50 trees in which the variable importance was calculated as the Gini index (Oliveira and Caseiro, [B49]). The maximum tree depth used was 1,000 and a minimum node size of two leaves was required. Features were normalized to the range 0 and 1. Variable importance was defined as the Gini index obtained when splitting on the variable at a specific split in the tree (Breiman, [B5]). The confusion matrix and the accuracy measures were calculated with the sklearn.metrics module and the performance metrics were calculated with sklearn.metrics.confusion_matrix_plot. The predict function was used to predict node importance on the MPAGE structure (Chazal et al., [B10]). The topological features were selected based on their impact on the tree (on a unit basis) with a minimum relative importance of 0.5. In order to understand the hierarchy of the importance of the features, each feature was ranked on the basis of the index corresponding to the minimum value of a feature set that minimizes the classification error (Cook and Weisberg, [B13]).
